

Room to move at Pathways ...

WHEN newlyweds Karl and Jill Bliss first stepped foot on the new land estate at Pathways, they knew they had found their new home.

The couple, who had moved to Murray Bridge from Queensland in July last year, were immediately impressed by the development and quickly snapped up one of the country living blocks that were on offer in the first land release.

"We had been looking at houses and allotments around the area but couldn't find anything that was not only affordable but also provided us with ample space to move - access down the sides of the home, as well as a sizable front and rear gardens and room for a garden shed out the back," Karl said.

"That's what impressed us about the allotment sizes that were on offer at Pathways."

Karl said he and Jill were also excited by the amount of land that had been dedicated to creating parkland areas at the estate.

"There's so much room to move at Pathways, unlike many of the other land developments in the area," Karl said.

"The design of the estate is more family orientated than others we've seen, there's plenty of space for people to take their children to the park or their dogs for a walk, which will help to build a sense of community within the estate.

"Pathways is also close to town and close to all amenities - including schools and shops - and the river is only a short distance away."
